

I strongly believe this is the most important moment of the work that we all together have been doing since a few months ago, and especially during the last days. Now we have the amazing opportunity of taking the work to our countries, to our communities, to ensure that each of the commitments are met. This is the time to reinforce our commitment as key elements in the HIV response.

It is time to recognize what needs to be done, but also to recognize the big importance of the work already done. It is time to think what's going to be our role as crucial partners in the HIV response.

As a Young person living with HIV I feel this is the opportunity to work together as a team to end stigma and discrimination, developing opportunities of dialog between everyone involved in the HIV and AIDS response, it is time to build a bridge between key affected populations and world religious leaders to make sure no one is left behind on the next steps we all are going to take.

Definitely one of the main tasks to do to ensure the success of this political declaration is to open and strengthen communication mechanisms with people living with HIV, women, youth, men who have sex with men, drug users, sex workers, transgender people and all key affected populations. We have seen wonderful impact when people living with HIV is involved and working together with faith groups to eradicate stigma and discrimination, we have seen great achievements when faith based organisations commit to eradicate homophobia at the community level, so we need to make sure key affected populations and faith leaders work together to go to the same direction Zero discrimination, zero new HIV infections and Zero AIDS related deaths.

I've had the opportunity to work at the community level in different countries and I've seen the impact of faith groups from the communities.

As a young person living with HIV I want to invite you to work together, to work from our communities, to experience together the impact of the real meaningful involvement of key affected populations, the impact of eradicating discrimination and the impact of meeting the needs of people living with HIV.

Let's work together in the prevention revolution, let's work together in the eradication of stigma and discrimination, let's make it happen!
